

You are here: Chicago Tribune > Chicago News Archives > 2010 > February > 10 > News

Archive for Wednesday, February 10, 2010

Parents' epilepsy group seeks awareness, research

Associated Press
February 10, 2010

CHICAGO - Parents of children with epilepsy have a new Chicago-based resource.

The Danny Did Foundation aims to raise awareness and prevent deaths from seizures. Its Web site began this week. It includes information on the latest research and links to epilepsy groups. It also serves as a memorial to the founders' son, 4-year-old Danny Stanton. The Chicago boy died from a seizure in his sleep in December.

His parents, Mike and Mariann Stanton, are pressing for research into preventing these deaths. Their goal is for a research-proven seizure alarm device that would alert parents when sleeping children have seizures.

Seizures...

Copyright 2010 Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten, or redistributed.

You are only seeing the first 100 of 129 words. Please register to continue...

Register with the Chicago Tribune for full access to the Archives

Register Now

Why Register?

Sign in below if you already have a Chicago Tribune account

Email Address:

Password:

Don't know your password?

Log In